TRANSCRIPT OF BRIEFING

TO: CMDR. MORHAY T. HATHARI LT. TAYLOR GENTRY

STARDATE 2/1501.20

Acheron Hyperdynamics was a small but inovative starship company looking for a big break. They got it when they landed their first major contract - their advanced M-66 modular warp drive components were the winning design in a contest sponsored by Star Fleet. The prototype components were sent to the Star Fleet proving grounds for installation in the test ships. But they never arrived: someone staged a massive warehouse robbery at a starport storage facility. All 54 drive modules - to be installed in six engines, vanished.

Hyperdynamics doesn't have it's own security force so Star Fleet has been asked to investigate. We suspected it was at least partially an inside job, and soon discovered a company clerk whom the crimanals had blackmailed into providing the details of the shipment. We found her. There's good news and bad news.

The bad news was that the inside man had a vibroblade shoved between her ribs: they'd killed her to cover their tracks.

The good news was that she had only been a corpse 23 hours when we found her. Using methods that shall remain classified, we were able to extract some information from her mind.

After 23 hours, most of her memories were pretty scrambled, but we got something. The clerk - Karen Key - was about to receive her payment when they killed her. But she saw something before she died - one of the thieves was looking at a travel brochure. The title on it was Silicon Towers, the planet was Herne. Silicon Towers isn't in our files - it may be a town, or a hotel - but it's the only lead we've got. Herne's a planet in the Vagabond system. They left two days ago. There's a briefing on Herne for you - read it on the trip.

Key's memories say ther are six people in the ring. We couldn't get clear descriptions on five of then - just one woman, four men. But we identified the leader: she's Denivue Calais, a former member of the Five Systems Cabal (which, by the way, is tied to the Orion underworld and is suspected of having links to the Warriors of Andor). She's also a formaer Star Fleet Security officer, turned arms smuggler, wanted for the suspected murder of an Inteligence agent who vanished a few months ago.

Since the M-66 prototypes were stolen rather than destroyed, it's unlikely the motive was sabotage against Acheron Hyperdynamics. Enough stardrive modules were taken to outfit 3 Constitution class starships or a fleet of smaller ships. The combined value of the system is over $400,000,000, but the experimental nature of the warp drive makes its components very easily identified, so the parts could not be easily resold without being identified, and will only function with Federation technology. Our best guess is that Denivue is working for someone who is planning to use the modules.

Your mission is to find out who and why.
